ABSTRACT

The aim of this report is to present a ranking of Communication journals covered in Google Scholar Metrics (GSM) for the period 2008-2013. It corresponds to the H Index update made last year for the period 2008-2012 (Repiso & Delgado López-Cózar 2013). Google Scholar Metrics does not currently allow to group and sort all journals belonging to a scientific discipline. Therefore, in an attempt to overcome this limitation, we have used the diversity of search procedures allowed by GSM to identify the greatest number of scientific journals of Communication with H Index calculated by this bibliometric tool.

The result is a ranking of 434 communication journals sorted by the same H Index. Journals are also grouped by quartiles.

BACKGROUND

Since the launch of Google Scholar (April 2012), the number of journals that include this bibliometric evaluation system has been growing. However journals are only sorted by languages and topics with a top limit. In the first case Google Scholar Metrics only shows the 100 journals with the greatest impact; then it only shows the 20 journals with the greatest impact by topic, which are measured using the H index. In order to overcome this limitation, and using various search procedures, the objective of this report is to provide an update of the ranking for all those communication journals indexed in Google Scholar Metrics.

It means the H Index update made last years for the periods 2007-2011 and 2008-2012. See:

This means the third ranking of communication journals using Google Scholar Metrics.

METHODOLOGICAL NOTE

Subject area covered: scientific journals that deal with the phenomenon of communication (theory, history and research), media (press, radio and television), journalism, audiovisual media, cinema, rhetoric and journalistic message, advertising and public relations.
Journal search strategy: In order to identify communication journals, the followings six journals databases have been consulted:

- ULRICH'S International Directory, which is considered the largest and most up-to-date directory of periodic publications in the world. It re-trieved all existing scientific journals (academic/scholarly) that had been indexed by topic in the categories («subjects»): «Communication», «Journalism», «Communication Television and Cable», «Communication Video», «Advertising», «Motion Picture» and «Public Relations».
- Google Scholar Metrics: Two strategies were employed here: Firstly, all indexed journals in the Communication category were downloaded. It should be noted that they were curiously listed under «Humanities», «Literature & Arts» and not under «Social Sciences». Secondly, a series of searches by journal titles was undertaken using the following keywords: «Communica-tion», «Mass Communications», «Communication Research», «Journalism», «Media», «Film», «Advertising», «Cinema, Audiovisual», «Audio», «Radio», «Television», «Public Relations», «Public Opinion», «Movie». These searches were carried out in the following languages: English, French, Spanish, German, Italian, Portuguese, Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Arabic, Russian, Turkish and Polish.
- Communication & Mass Media Complete: Communication journals considered as «core», that is, entered in the database in their entirety (cover to cover). (www.ebscohost.com/academic/communication-mass-media-complete).
- Web of Science: Journals indexed in the topical categories of «Communication» and «Film, Radio & Television» (http://ip-science.thomsonreuters.com/-mjl).
- Scopus: Journals indexed in the theme categories of «Communication» and «Visual Arts and Performing Arts» (www.info.sciverse.com/scopus/scopus-in-detail/facts).

After a manual filter of the entries for each search, to identify the relevant journals for the subject area covered by this paper, all the information was downloaded into a Microsoft Access® database, where titles were unified and any duplicates eliminated. A total of 1319 communication journals were identified. These journals were then searched for in GSM in the first week of July 2014.

Criteria for the inclusion of Google Scholar Metrics journals:
It covers only journals that have published at least 100 articles in the period 2008-2012 and those which have received at least one citation (i.e., excluding journals with h-index = 0).

Displaying the Results:
- The journals are sorted by their H Index. In case of draw, the discriminate value is the average of the number of citations obtained by the articles that contribute to the H Index.
The evolution shows the position held by every journal in Google Scholar Metrics in contrast to the period 2008-2012.

In comparison to the previous year, 26 journals disappear of Google Scholar Metrics and 113 are incorportated. This means a ranking with 434 journals in the fields of communication.

The journals with * are presented in Google Scholar Metrics under two forms due to standardisation concerns.
